

Women's Emergent Leadership Institute

(Certificate Program)

Emergent leadership is a key trait that is in high demand by a range of industries; such leadership is integral to building strong teams and utilizing innovation to create effective and transformational change.

The Women's Emergent Leadership Institute (WELI) at Becker College

WELI is a uniquely designed certificate program focusing on developing emergent leaders—those who are capable of successfully navigating chaos and complexity, inspiring others through a collaborative and innovative point of view, and nurturing an organization and its culture to ensure sustainability.

Participants in this program develop a deep understanding of emergent leadership qualities critical to facilitating effective, transformational, and innovative change, both within themselves and within the organizations they serve. WELI participants will develop a proposal implementing business principles for social impact in a final project.

WELI is designed for women who aspire to be engaged in potential areas of leadership or who are currently in leadership roles and desire the development of a leadership style that is inclusive, consensus-building, collaborative, and collegial for the purpose of achieving personal excellence and becoming creative agents of change.

“WELI gave me valuable insight and the wings with which to soar. I am so grateful to have been part of the inaugural program; it has been life changing. WELI is by far one of the most beneficial programs offered at Becker College.”

“When I started this series of classes...I was already working in management/leadership at my company, but felt like half the time I was not being listened to by fellow managers especially males. This class taught me to be confident, speak up, know my audiences and how to approach them, most of all to be mindful of my own personal needs, strengths and beliefs.”
– Barbra Sekesogundu-Simon
